

THE 10-MINUTE WALK® PROGRAM

A National Movement to Put Parks Within Reach of Everyone

JOIN OVER 300 MAYORS WHO ARE LEADING THE WAY.

Parks Are Essential Infrastructure

Parks aren't just amenities—they're powerful tools for city-building. From improving public health and climate resilience to boosting economic vitality and community trust, parks deliver real, measurable value.

But Not Everyone Has Access to these Benefits

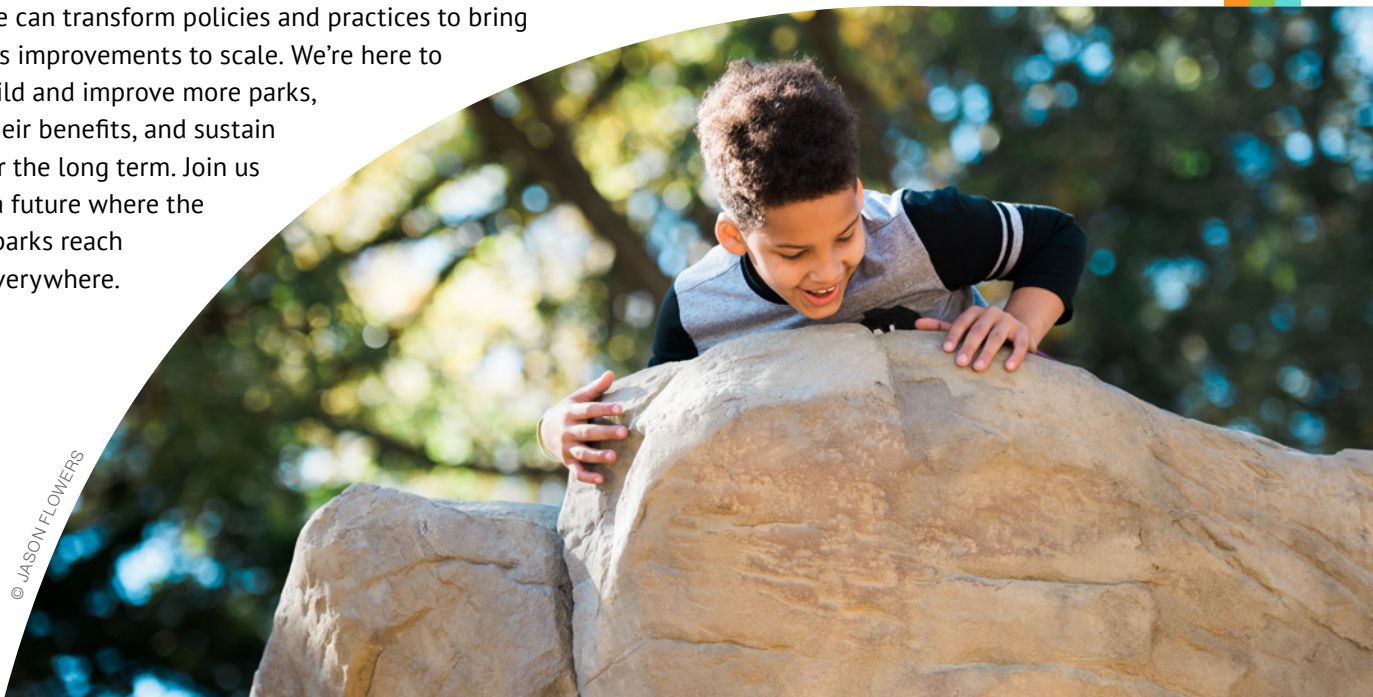

One in three U.S. residents—over 100 million people—don't live within a 10-minute walk of a quality park. Communities of color and low-income neighborhoods are the most likely to be left behind due to decades of underinvestment and inequitable policy decisions. The result is a gap in park access and quality—and significant disparities in health outcomes, environmental risk, and quality of life—along racial and socio-economic lines.

Together We Can Change That

For 50 years, Trust for Public Land has worked alongside cities to plan, fund, and build great parks. Through our 10-Minute Walk® program, we help mayors and city teams close the park equity gap and unlock the full power of parks in their communities.

Together, we can transform policies and practices to bring park systems improvements to scale. We're here to help you build and improve more parks, maximize their benefits, and sustain this work for the long term. Join us in building a future where the benefits of parks reach everyone, everywhere.

- Testing and accelerating action. Our Park Equity Accelerator helps cities tackle barriers to equity through in-depth, year-long partnerships. We offer tailored support on data analysis, community engagement, funding strategies, and more.
- Policy innovation and sharing solutions. We collaborate with cross-sector experts to uncover and promote policies that work—then turn those insights into usable tools, resources, and case studies.
- Partnering to scale impact. Across our work, we collaborate with national and local partners to identify, test, and implement promising policies and practices. Together, we drive the park equity movement forward, scaling impact across communities.
